I. ANIMATION OVERVIEW

I don't think this was the most exciting month (not a dig on you, I'm just losing confidence in the program a bit lol) so i went ahead and... well, went ahead. I added an environment and some other mini animations and thingies around so I didn't get bored but this one certainly was very technical rather than creative. But it's fine ~

II. ISSUES FOUND

- I think I have decided: Animation might just not be for me. It's cool and awesome to see how things come to life but it takes soooo long and well, I'm not sure if I have the patience to do something like this for many hours. I think Zbrush was a bit more interesting. The irony.
- Unity HIDES everything inside a mega spaghetti and nothing is easy to find and to understand. I can't believe animation trees have to be inside animation blends and then a timeline to control separate animations and and and and soooo many things agh
- I tried doing the climbing and nah, I think I was overscoping on that one so instead of pushing all the way I just chilled a bit and Michelle... she just likes to dance like A LOT

III. WHAT I LEARNED

- Animation is hard but is rewarding. It's time consuming but looks so pretty. I said "might not be" because, again, I felt this month was too technical... I am still gonna do my sailor pluto transformation - I prefer having a bit more of control in Maya than just grabbing stuff that mixamo has and doesn't really go with the character of the story.
- I mean I learned so much from you as always! I dont think i can break it down but i just gotta say that you might just be the best professor in BVC. Or at least the one that cares the most.
